About Clem Judd Jr:

Clem Judd Jr. was a forceful and visionary leader in Hawaii's visitor industry for many years. He continually exercised his influence to promote programs that furthered the education and career-readiness of Hawaii's young people, and encouraged a better understanding among schools, hotels, and the community. During his 17-year tenure as head of the Hawai'i Hotel Association, he was an effective spokesman for the hospitality industry, respected for his integrity and wisdom. Under his leadership, the Hotel Association successfully handled the challenges of an increasingly complex environment. He was also instrumental in establishing and overseeing the Association's annual Visitor Industry Charity Walk, which has raised millions of dollars for Hawaii charities.

A native of Hawaii, Clem Judd was born in Kealahou on the Big Island. He attended Punahou School, graduating in 1956 with academic and athletic honors. He received an undergraduate degree from Occidental College in Los Angeles and, in 1969, received an MBA from the University of Hawaii. He also served as president and director of the American Society of Association Executives, chairman of the Hawaii State Tourism Training Council and was a member of the Tourism Plan Advisory Committee.

Clem Judd served on advisory boards for the U.S. Congressional Travel & Tourism Caucus, the University of Hawaii, Brigham Young University Hawaii, Hawaii Pacific College, Kapiolani Community College, School-to-Work Transition Centers, the Hawaii Industry Advisory Board and the Hawaii Council on Economic Education.
